The hacking jacket

A neat hacking jacket gains urban cred in slate cashmere herringbone. Katherine Hooker's – already spotted on the Duchess of Cambridge and Jemma Kidd – are bespoke and ingeniously tailored (angled hip pockets accentuate the waist). Alternatively try the new longer Clifford coat, inspired by one of Katherine's favourite references – the classic Forties land-girl look.

From horsey pieces to pedigree tweeds, Emma Elwick-Bates travels the country in search of our national treasures

The sturdy carry-all

Pack up your travels in... an elegant Tusting holdall. With more than a century's experience of tanning and grading leather, the family-run company produces luggage that has been the aristocrats' stealth travelling companion for 130 years. Now the secret is out, why not stamp the Explorer style with your initials, as above?

The quilted jacket

Founded in 1969, Lavenham produces equestrian clothing and horse rugs out of Sudbury in Suffolk. Its neat quilted jacket, modelled on the dress of British stableworkers, is available in a rainbow of autumnal hues. The Southwold is the standout style – featuring a Peter Pan collar and patch pockets, it radiates schoolish charm.
